The Body Weather Log

A symptom and flare tracker from Sigil and Scribe

Ninety days of noticing, one page at a time.

How to use this log

One page a day, or one page whenever. Fill in what you can and leave the rest blank. A half-finished page still tells the truth.

Circle a number for pain and for energy, from 0 (none, or empty) to 10 (the most, or full). Your scale is your own. It only has to make sense to you.

Check the weather for your mood: sunny, cloudy, stormy, foggy, or clear night. Then note symptoms and flares in plain words, and what helped, even a little.

Over weeks, patterns start to show: what tends to come before a flare, what a good stretch looks like, what actually helps. That is what this log is for.

This log is a personal record to help you notice patterns. It is not medical advice and not a diagnosis tool. If something in these pages worries you, bring the log and your questions to someone you trust with your care.
